Going to the gym doesn't always live up to its promise, not just because of our lacklustre efforts on the treadmill, but because, with a few exceptions, the equipment fails to inspire. Thankfully, Italian designer Luca Schieppati has upped the ante with 'Ciclotte', an innovative exercise bike. While the design of its large single wheel is inspired by early motorcycles, 'Ciclotte' is all about 21st century technology and features a touch-screen display and carbon handlebar. Weighing less than 60kg, it can be moved without us working up too much of a sweat – so we can save that for when we get on it.
